Great Painter, Anti-Nazi Cartoonist, Dies, Was To Do History For Government Of Canada

Arthur Szyk, fifty-five, Polish-born artist who was known equally well for his painstaking illuminations of mankind's great documents and his savage anti-Nazi political cartoons, died at his home, on Weed Street, in New Canaan, Conn., of a heart ailment. He had been commissioned by the Canadian government to do a painted history of Canada.

Mr. Szyk was regarded by many artists as the leading living miniature painter and he was virtually the only modern practitioner of the all but lost art of illumination, a form perfected by monks of the Middle Ages who illustrated holy writ on parchment and vellum manuscript. His paintings, art critics have said, were done with colors rich as crushed jewels, lines fine as hair, and with a fantastic wealth of exquisitely minute detail secured in compositions frequently no more than a few inches in dimension.

It took four years for Mr. Szyk to complete his illuminated haggadah, which is the service for the first two nights of Passover and tells the story of the Exodus. The Sun Engraving Co., which made printing history by its color reproductions on vellum, took three years to gather materials for its publication.

The book, which ranks as one of Mr. Szyk's major works, contains the Hebrew text of the service rendered into English by the noted British scholar, Dr. Cecil Roth. The edition published in 1939 and dedicated to King George VI of England, was limited to 240 copies at $500 each. Some copies have commanded as high as $2,500.

His haggadah was published the same year as the rape of his native Poland by the Nazis. Mr. Szyk, who lost members of his family in the ensuing massacres, promptly dropped his assiduous but peaceful role of miniaturist and turned to political caricature as an act of faith, says the New York Herald Tribune.

Shortly after he came to America to live in 1940, a series of his

1,100 Leaders From 42 States Press Bond Sale

A four-day national economic conference to mobilize American support for the industrial and agricultural development of Israel was held in Washington, D. C., with speeches by Secretary of Labor Maurice J. Tobin and Henry Morgenthau jr., chairman of the board of governors of the State of Israel bond drive. More than 1,100 Jewish industrial and civic leaders from forty-two states attended the sessions.

The Israel bond drive, begun in May, seeks to raise $500,000,000 in the United States through the sale of interest-bearing bonds. Unlike philanthropic fund-raising efforts, the money collected through the bond drive will be used to develop new industries which [illegible] other immediate necessities for new immigrants.

Mr. Morgenthau, in his address, linked the success of the bond drive to President Truman's Point 4 program for the development of backward areas throughout the world. The bond drive, he said, not only will help Israel but will strengthen the democratic forces everywhere, reports the New York Herald Tribune.

After noting that in five months the bond drive has become "the foremost source of funds for the continued development of Israel," Mr. Morgenthau said: "As we survey the world scene, we must recognize that the Israel bond issue is more than a vital force for the future development of Israel. In view of the growing dangers to world peace, the bond issue is a strong pillar of support for the cause of world democracy.

"America needs dependable and devoted allies in this crucial period. Israel has emerged as a democracy whose people are zealously determined to safeguard the principles of freedom. The new economic strength which we pump into Israel through the bond issue will enhance its position as a guardian of democracy on the strategic highway between East and West. Therefore, an Israel bond is not only a bond for the growth of Israel but also a bond for the defense of democracy."

Mr. Morgenthau said that since the bond sales were started in the United States May 1, more than $50,000,000 has been sent to Israel. This sum, he said, is "far larger" than the amount of money received by Israel "from all other sources in the United States since January 1 of this year."

David Horowitz, Director General of the Israeli Ministry of Finance, told the conference that the government and people of Israel "are determined to use the proceeds of the sale of Israel bonds completely for productive and constructive purposes."

Mr. Horowitz said that $13,060,000 was spent for industry and mining; $10,100,000 for development of electric power, including the purchase of new generating units; $12,128,000 for agriculture, including irrigation projects; $6,250,000 for the construction of housing in industrial areas, and $2,940,000 for expansion of existing hotels.

Eliezer Kaplan, Israeli Finance Minister, in a cable to the meeting, said that during the last three years since the state was established, $700,000,000 has been invested in industry and agriculture. This money came from both foreign and Israeli sources.

U. S. Secretary of Labor Maurice J. Tobin said that Israel was following the pattern of the United States in making increased pro-

Sees Decades Of Help To Israel From Here

Rabbi Phillip S. Bernstein, president of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, asserted at Atlantic City, N. J., that Zionism was a "progressive, dynamic, democratic answer to the Jewish problem," but stressed, that it "does not preclude the possibility and the right of Jews choosing to remain in the free lands of the world."

The prominent leader, of Rochester, whose organization represents the rabbis of the Reform branch of Judaism of the United States and Canada, spoke before 3,500 delegates at the thirty-seventh annual convention of Hadassah, the women's Zionist organization. Another speaker was Henry Steele Commager, Professor of History at Columbia University.

In listing Israel's economic problems and emphasizing that financial help would be required by the fledging state "for decades to come" from American Jews, Dr. Bernstein said that "all these we will do and more, but the great majority of American Jews will remain in this country."

"Their roots are deeply planted here," he declared, "they have faith in its future. They see no conflict between their loyalty to America and their devotion to Israel."

If problems of anti-Semitism should arise in America, "Americans should meet them with two-fisted courage, not by terrified flight," Dr. Bernstein asserted. He added that "any approach to American Jews, especially to young American Jews, playing upon their fears, is doomed to failure."

On the subject of Israel, Dr. Bernstein, who recently returned from [illegible] pointed to the record [illegible] progress and stressed that [illegible] health and [illegible] were "indispensable to survival." He added that Hadassah "must do no less, but more than before!"

The United Jewish Appeal, Dr. Bernstein declared, "will continue for years to come" to meet the immigration and resettlement problems in Israel. Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion's hope last summer that Israel's present population of 1,300,000 would be increased to 4,000,000 in 1960, Dr. Bernstein said, will "entail ongoing major responsibilities for the one great, rich Jewish community in the world" — referring to American Jews. Dr. Bernstein asserted that Israel's economy could not be firmly established without substantial capital investment from abroad.

Labor Leader Was I.L.G.W.U. Officer For 33 Years

Harry Wander, a pioneer member of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, A.F.L., and director of its Eastern out-of-town department since 1930, died in Los Angeles, where he was attending a meeting of the union's general executive board. He was 72 years old. Mr. Wander, who had been an I. L. G. W. U. vice president for thirty-three years, collapsed in his hotel room. Earlier he had delivered a report to the executive board, which includes David Dubinsky, president, and the twenty-two surviving vice presidents.

Born in Galicia, then a part of the old Austro-Hungarian Empire, Mr. Wander learned the tailoring trade as a youth, and went to London in 1902. Two years later he went to New York. Mr. Wander went to work as a shirtmaker and soon was a member of the garment union, then in its infancy. In 1907, he became a member of the executive board of Local 23 and soon after represented the local as a delegate to the Cloak Joint Board.

As the union grew, Mr. Wander held many offices and planned many organizational campaigns. During the cloakmakers strike of 1910 he was a leader. In 1916, he was named manager of Local 23 and two years later was elected an I. L. G. W. U. vice president.

In the Twenties, when the union carried on a fight against Communists, Mr. Wander was active in cleaning them out of the I. L. G. W. U. As manager of the pioneer Union Health Center, he kept that institution from falling into the hands of the Communists who had won control of the cloak union.

In 1926, after defeating the Com-

Zionist Official Doubts Usefulness Of Movement, Cites Loss Of Numbers

Rudolf G. Sonneborn, for thirty years a leading American Zionist, questioned publicly for the first time whether the traditional political Zionism existing in the United States has not outlived its usefulness and should be either scrapped or reorganized. At a press conference at his home at the Sherry-Netherland, in New York, Mr. Sonneborn, who recently returned from a two-month visit to Israel, raised an issue which has caused widespread discussion and disagreement among Jews throughout the world, says the New York Herald Tribune.

Traditionally, Zionism has had as its primary objective the establishment of a Jewish homeland in Palestine. This was accomplished three years ago with the birth of Israel. Zionism, however, has not been a single, unified movement in the United States. There are numerous Zionist parties, each with its own political view, joined together only by a desire for the Jewish state.

Thus the Zionist Organization of America is a general Zionist group which wants to see a free enterprise system such as exists in the United States established in Israel. There are Labor Zionists who want to see a socialist state, religious Zionist who want stricter adherence to the religious traditions, religious Labor Zionists who want Orthodoxy in religion and socialism in economics, and various other groups.

There has been considerable disagreement among American and Israel Jews, whether the American political Zionist parties should identify themselves with their counterparts in Israel as most of them have done. Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion of Israel, during his recent visit to the United States, made clear to American Zionist leaders that he wanted them to remain out of Israeli politics — in other words that American political groups

MARRIAGES

ROLAND-AARON

The marriage of Miriam Joy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Barnett Aaron, Cedar Avenue, to Dr. Samuel Irwin Roland, son of Mrs. Yetta Rubenstein, of Palo Alto, Calif., and the late Solomon Rubenstein, of Chicago, Ill., took place on September 16, at Shaar Hashomayim Synagogue, at half-past five o'clock. Rabbi Wilfred Shuchat, Reverend J. J. Fromm, and Cantor Nathan Mendelson officiated. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of hand-embroidered lace and net in pale eggshell color. It had appliqued lace over yoke of net, creating the effect of an off-the-shoulder decolletage of the closely fitting bodice, with long sleeves, and layers of net over satin formed a billowing skirt with a wide lace flounce draped over the train. Her veil of fulle was attached to a small coronet of appliqued lace and she carried white orchids and lilies-of-the-valley. Mrs. Albert Asch, cousin of the groom, of Palo Alto, Calif., was matron of honor. Her dress was of gold-coloured net over taffeta, with matching stole, and she carried a cascade bouquet of bronze-coloured chrysanthemums to match her head-piece. The attendants were: Mrs. Ira Roland, sister-in-law of the groom, of Chicago, Ill.; Misses Marjorie Rady, of Winnipeg, Man., cousin of the bride; Marilyn Goldman and Elca Kaplansky. They were dressed alike in gold-shaded net over taffeta, with matching stoles, and carried cascade bouquets of bronze-shaded pom poms, with matching head-pieces. Arnold Aaron, brother of the bride, was best man. The ushers were: Ira Roland, brother of the groom, of Chicago, Ill.; Albert Asch, cousin of the groom, of Palo Alto, Calif.; Gerald Bronfman, Mitchell Bronfman, Alvin Druxerman, of Winnipeg, Man.; and Albert Aaron, all cousins of the bride. Mrs. M. N. Fineberg played the organ music. A dinner was given in the Mount Royal Hotel, the bridal party receiving against a bower of greenery and yellow and pink chrysanthemums. The ballroom was decorated with palms and standards of bronze and yellow chrysanthemums. The bridal table was arranged with centrepieces and garlands of Sweetheart roses and miniature white pom poms. The tables for the guests were lighted with white candles encircled with garnet-coloured roses. Mrs. Aaron, mother of the bride, received in a gown of midnight-blue satin, a hat in two tones of matching blue tulle, and a corsage spray of gold-coloured orchids. Mrs. Rubenstein, mother of the groom, was gowned in toast-coloured crepe, with a corsage of gold-tone orchids. Later Dr. and Mrs. Roland left by plane for Cuba, Haiti, and the Dominican Republic, the bride travelling in a suit of cocoa-brown wool, with a short jacket, having a small collar, and a gored crinoline skirt over taffeta, also a small hat of brown velour felt. They will reside in Sunnyvale, Calif. The bride graduated from Stanford University, in Palo Alto, Calif., in December. Last year she represented Canada as its sole member at the American Friends Service Committee's International Seminar held at Woodstock, Vt. She is now continuing her studies in post-graduate work in International Relations at Stanford. Dr. Roland received his degree in medicine from the University of Illinois in 1945, after first doing undergraduate work at the University of Chicago. He served in the United States Army Medical Corps as captain for two years. Mr. and Mrs. Peter Groper, Miss Zelda Groper, Mr. and Mrs. Bertram Druker, Mrs. Ben. Phillips, all of Newton, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Berns, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Fine, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Greenberg, all of Brookline, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. David Rosen, of Boston, Mass.; Dr. and Mrs. Alfred E. THE TRAGIC CASE OF THE JEWS OF PERSIA (IRAN), AN ANCIENT COMMUNITY IN DISSOLUTION

The following article was prepared by the Institute of Jewish Affairs, in New York: Iran covers about 628,000 square miles equal to the combined territories of Great Britain, France, Italy and Germany, or double the areas of the states of New York, California, Florida, and Ohio taken together. However, about 70 per cent of the total area is desert land of which some 20 per cent could be brought under cultivation by irrigation. Sixty per cent of the currently cultivated land consists of forests, while the remaining 40 per cent is composed of farms, pastures, and orchards.

Since no reliable census has ever been taken, no exact figures on the population are available. The estimate is about 16,000,000 or 17,000,000, of whom 13,000,000 are peasants and some 3,000,000 urban people. There are about 156,000 industrial workers and some 150,000 homeworkers.

The population is of mixed origin, with Indian, Semitic, and Mongolian features. The predominant religion is the Shia Sect of Islam. Only about 5 per cent of the population is literate; in larger towns, like the capital (Teheran) and some others, literacy rises to 8 per cent. There is only one university, situated in Teheran, a few high schools in the principal towns, and one technical college run by the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company.

As in all other Middle East countries, most of the land belongs to big landowners, and the peasant shares the income with them, the providers of water, and, often, the money lender. The average annual income of a peasant is estimated at $62 or $150 per family. According to Israel T. Naamani (Middle Eastern Affairs, June-July, 1951.):

"The tenant farmers are undernourished, tattered, and live huddled in squalid, disease-ridden villages; they work with implements similar to those their ancestors used three or four thousand years ago. Perhaps even worse off than the tenant farmers are the artisans, the weavers of rugs, the workers in wood, leather and precious metals, whose work-shops and dwellings are combined in the same crowded, dingy quarters. Their working hours are limitless; their income is a pittance. Social services are almost non-existent and when some welfare legislation is passed, a large part of the funds for its implementation is siphoned off by officials before it leaves the Government bureaus."

The late President Roosevelt summed up his impressions of Iran in one paragraph of which the most poignant part reads as follows: "Iran is definitely a very, very backward nation. It consists really of a series of tribes, and 99 per cent of the population is in effect in bondage to the other 1 per cent."

Although Iran has a modern constitution and a bicameral parliament, no political parties in the modern sense of the word exist. Whatever groups do exist are personal followings of a handful of big landowners or merchants. As a result, the parliament is hardly anything but a close oligarchy of wealthy families.

In 1950 the number of Jews in Iran was estimated at between 90,000 and 110,000. (At present there are about 70,000 to 90,000 Jews, although a very recent report by a representative of the Alliance Israelite put the number at only 85,000.) They are mainly concentrated in towns and cities. Last year Teheran contained 80,000 Jews (according to other sources 40,000 or even 50,000 Jews); Shiraz, 15-17,000; Isfahan about 10,000; Kermanshah 3,500; Hamadan some 3,000; Meshed 2,500; in addition; there were a number of communities with over 1,000 Jews or several hundred each. Previously, considerable Jewish communities existed in other towns, but were destroyed as a result of persecution. A case in point is the community of Tabriz where 4,000 Jews were reportedly killed in the 19th century as a result of ritual murder accusation.

Iranian Jewry consists mainly of indigenous Jews who for the most part speak a Persian-Jewish dialect. Jews living in Western Azerbaidzen speak Turkoman and those of Kurdistan, Kurdish (and among themselves, an Armenian dialect.) There is also a sprinkling of Russian, German, French, Arab, Bokharan and Afghan Jews. A peculiar group is constituted by the Jews of Meshed, a Moslem holy town near the USSR and Afghan borders, who in 1839 were forcibly converted to Islam but secretly remained Jews. Those "Marranos" clung faithfully to their Jewish religion but in such secrecy that the Moslems were not aware of it. During this whole time only a single Jewish family was reportedly lost by conversion to the Bahai religion.

On the other hand, there was a great movement among them toward assimilation. Mixed marriages became a common occurrence and the youth tried to submerge their Jewishness by becoming patriotic Iranian nationalists. When the Alliance wanted to open a school, even the older elements objected. Nonetheless, there was some contact with Palestine and during the last decades some 200 families emigrated thither. A stream of Marranos flowed to the border lands of Afghanistan, Turkestan, and Bokhara, and also into the interior of Persia.

Another peculiar group is formed by the Kurdish Jews numbering about 12,000 - 14,000, and claiming to be descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes. They formed quite a considerable community speaking a dialect similar to Aramaic and to the language of the Babylonian Talmud. Persecuted by the Sunni Moslems, they have fled lately by the thousands to Teheran, mostly as a wayside stop pending emigration to Israel. Persecution in that religion started in the beginning of 1950, and murder and raping of women forced the Jews of this mountainous region to leave their homes in a great hurry. About 3,500 were still there in April, 1951.

The history of the Jewish community shows some bright but also very dark moments. In ancient times the Jews seemed to have enjoyed full freedom and some measure of prosperity. The Califs of the Abbasid dynasty (750-1258) were as a rule tolerant to the Jews except for Harun-Al-Rashid and some others. This tolerant policy seems to have prevailed until the middle of the 15th century. At the end of the 13th century, a Jewish physician by the name of Saad-ad-Daula was Minister of Finance and Grand Vizier. However, with the accession to the throne of the Safavid (1449) a change occurred in the status of the Jews, as nationalism and unity of religion was proclaimed the basis of Persian policy. The dominant religion was Shiism and its clergy introduced the tenet of nadgis, according to which anything touched by an infidel, especially if it is moist, becomes ritually unclean.

A period of severe persecution began in the latter part of the 16th century, during which many Jews were forced to adopt Islam, their leaders tortured to death, and Jewish books confiscated. Mass and individual conversion to Islam became common occurrences. Best known are the instances of the towns of Meshed (mentioned above) and Shiraz, where a fair proportion of the Moslem population are descendants of Jews. The American missionary, Henry A. Stern, who visited Shiraz in 1849, claimed that all the silk merchants of that town's bazaar were Jews forcibly converted to Islam.

In certain towns where no Jews are left to-day, the peculiar dress of the population still indicates their Jewish origin. (Conversion on individual basis to avoid persecution was still going on in modern times. Similarly, some conversion by American and Scottish missionaries took place: at the beginning of the century these converts to Christianity numbered in Teheran about 160.) During that period the fate of the Jews was in the hands of the clergy. The situation became critical when the Afghan Mahamud became Shah. The Kurds who constituted part of his army constantly plundered the Jewish population. Somewhat later (around the middle of the 18th century) the Hamadan Jewish community was pogromized.

A considerable role in the deterioration of the Jewish position was played by the Armenians. Until the middle of the 15th century, the Jews of Persia were the middlemen in the trade between Persia, India and Turkey. Since then the Armenians took over this role and constantly incited the populace against the Jews. The afore-mentioned pogrom in Tabriz is a case in point.

The position of Persian Jewry in the ensuing centuries was one of extreme misery and backwardness. This was mainly due to their precarious political and social position, and the resulting restrictions on economic pursuits. Since the Jews, as stated, are considered infidels and practically everything they touch becomes unclean, Persians do not rent houses to Jews; consequently, Jews, as a rule, could not reside anywhere except in Jewish quarters. These quarters could not be expanded (especially in the provinces) because Persians do not sell their houses to Jews: they bury their dead in the cellars and Jews are not allowed to use such dwellings. On rainy days Jews were not permitted to leave their quarters because their wet clothes would make unclean anything they touch. Until the end of the last century Jews, were for the same reason permitted to use only highways but no paths, especially through fields. They could use only certain water wells not used by the Moslems; although this prohibition was lifted some time ago, it has been enforced on many occasions.

There existed (and in many cases) many other restrictions. For instance, Jews were not allowed to ride on horseback in towns; they had to shave their heads and wear a special badge of red fabric on the breast. The latter was changed to a silver pin with the inscription "Ben-Israel." Only with the establishment of the Alliance schools at the end of the last century did the Jews of Teheran stop wearing the badge, and other Jewish communities followed suit. In smaller places this innovation led to pogroms.

A Shutic religious law prescribes that a Jewish estate is inherited by a distant Moslem relative, even if there are children or nearer Jewish relatives. This law was abolished twice (in 1881 or 1890) but continued to be applied de facto thereafter because, strictly speaking, the Shah cannot abolish religious laws.

No wonder that the rules described above made the Jews legal and economic pariahs. Since Jewish craftsmen could not count on Moslem patronage, there were few artisans. Jews, especially outside of Teheran, could not sell to Moslems any meat, fish, or vegetables because all of them contain moisture. Therefore, their main occupation was trading in rugs or antiques, while some were intermediaries, physicians, or musicians. In the smaller towns the main occupation was peddling of fabrics and dry goods. A notable exception were the "Jews" of Meshed: as late as 1945 about 80 per cent of them consisted of big merchants and middle-class people, while the rest were employed in local enterprises such as the food, clothing, and similar industries.

The decline in the legal and economic position was followed by a decline in culture. Hebrew and Persian education was rare and European education even rarer. There were few Talmudic scholars even among the rabbis. There were no Jewish printing presses and Moslem ones could not be used because of the nadgis doctrine. There remained, therefore, only imports from Italy, Austria and Palestine. Because of the low status of culture, the Persian Jews were highly superstitious. Their belief in Shaydim (ghosts) and sorcery was very widespread.

The Jewish population of Iran has not been subjected to governmental persecution of late, especially under the present (30-year-old) Pahlavi dynasty. Legally, they are equals among equals. Nonetheless, their position is at present essentially almost the same as described above. No Jew can be elected to Parliament by Moslems; there is only one Jewish member representing the Jewish minority. According to existing practice, no Jew may become a judge. Jewish soldiers receive promotion in exceptional cases only.

Existing restrictions make it practically impossible for Jews to enter the civil service; they are excluded from the legal profession, and the National Bank of Persia refuses to this day to employ Jews. Concessions are rarely granted to Jews. Few Jews are admitted to high schools, although about 100 Jewish students attend the Teheran University. All in all Persian Jewry occupies a very inferior position in the administrative, economic and cultural life of the country.

Economically, only about 1 per cent of the Jews are wealthy. These are mostly immigrants from Iraq, big business men, mainly in the import and export business, or owners of real estate. Others are Ashkenazi Jews, in the main immigrants from Russia. About 10 per cent are estimated to belong to the middle class; about 30 per cent eke out a precarious living; and the remainder subsist from day to day on occasional earnings or charity. It is considered that about 50 per cent of the Persian Jews are desperately in need of assistance, their living conditions being below the minimum existence level even by the extremely low Persian standards.

The majority of the Jews still live in overcrowded and unsanitary Jewish quarters (ghettos). This is also true of Teheran, the modern capital of Persia, with a million population. The ghetto consists of narrow and winding "streets" with small courtyards containing about 15 earthen "houses," some of them under the ground, like catacombs. All these dwellings consist of one single room each and are exactly alike except that some are in a better or worse state of repair. The number of occupants is usually ten or more. The interior is practically empty, without beds or chairs, some lacking even a table. The children are either totally barefoot or wear torn shoes. Most children go practically naked. No light or heating exists in most houses.

There are, however, many families who do not have even such quarters and live under the "open skies," subsisting on fruit and vegetables picked from the garbage cans of the richer people. The appalling poverty in the ghettos of Teheran and other cities is considered to be even worse than in the mellahs of Morocco. A vivid description of these conditions was given by J. Koppellowitz in the Menorah Journal of January, 1930. We quote:

THE TRAGIC CASE

"The people who live in the ghetto are, almost without exception, sickly and short-lived. Eye and skin diseases are common. The men are wretched physical specimens, and the women age early. Hunger and pestilence brood over the whole community and early take heavy toll of life. The people move about amidst indescribable squalor and filth. The streets and yards are heaped with refuse, and the air is filled with stink. Dirty and ragged children, undernourished and covered with sores, play in the narrow streets and alleys and around the garbage heaps, breathing daily the foulest air. The shops that line the streets are tiny cells, dark and dirty; their wares are thrown in a heap, without any attempt at cleanliness or order. The houses are all mean, but those of the poor are mere hovels, built almost underground. Smoke and grime cover the walls and the sun never penetrates."

Owing to the above mentioned restrictions, Jews even in Teheran are happy to obtain work at cleaning the towns' sewers or carding wool for rugs (Jews are not accepted in factories and they are not permitted to dye the wool.) For 10 hours' work a day these Jews earn about 8 to 10 cents. A certain number of Jews are engaged as craftsmen in weaving, carpentry, shoemaking, or as coppersmiths. A small number have shops, selling textiles and hardware. A few Jewish peasants and small landowners are to be found in some places. The main occupation of the poor Jews is peddling. The peddlar must buy his goods in cash (or borrow money at exorbitant interest) and sell them on credit to peasants in the country. To obtain payment is rather difficult and many peddlars are severely beaten on such occasions; some never return from such trips.

Especially tragic is the situation of the younger generation, who cannot find occupations due to the constant deterioration in the position of the Jews. As a result of the crushing poverty and the unhygienic conditions of life there is an appalling incidence of diseases; tuberculosis and trachoma spread rapidly and take a heavy toll of the undernourished population, especially the children.

As in all Moslem countries, in marriage, divorce, inheritance rights, Kashrut, and other matters of communal interest, the Jews are governed by the Mosaic laws dispensed by rabbis holding a legal status.

This is how Jean Jaffe, who travelled recently through the whole of Persia, describes the situation: (Jewish Affairs, London, December, 1950.)

"And the Jews impaled in this structure for more than two thousand years, scattered in the main in ancient sunken ghettos, from the Caspian Sea to the Persian Gulf and from Iraq to India, have shrivelled and shrunken in body and spirit over these centuries. Only the Hook of God alerts them somewhat to life and binds them to the rest of Jewry.

"Only in Teheran, the capital, with its Western face and Asiatic body, where almost a third of Persia's Jews live, is there a semblance of communal life and its responsibility. It is a motley community with Iraqi, Turkish and Afghan Jews besides the Persians. These indigenous groups draw their life-line and guidance from a small handful of newcomers. They are the Ashkenazi group, which fled from Russia, some thirty years ago, and brought with them the rich, full-blown culture of Russian Jewry. These lost no time in transplanting their culture and institutions in the spiritually barren and time-worn surface of their new land. And until this day, though they have been reduced from a hundred families to twenty, they maintained an imposing network of modern communal life, as we know it."

The best and most frequented schools are those of the Alliance Israelite, which were established in Persia in the latter decades of the 19th century. At present there are 22 Alliance schools with an enrollment of about 8,000. There is also a school of the Anglo-Jewish Association. The local organization Ozar Hatorah maintains some 38 schools with combined enrollment of 3,800. A number of other pupils attend government schools, but education is hindered by the lack of funds to maintain the Jewish schools (in Shiraz the Alliance schools had had to discontinue activities for this reason), the lack of clothing and shoes for children to enable them to attend school. Recently, the Joint Distribution Committee was giving 2,000 of them a regular meal daily, clothing to 3,000 and medical care to many thousands. Education is also hampered by the necessity of sending the healthier children to work so that they may contribute to the maintenance of the family. Illiteracy among the Jews has gradually decreased to about 75 per cent.

Emigration of Iranian Jews to Israel in considerable numbers commenced after the Kurdistan disorders. By October, 1950, 1,500 to 2,000 Kurdish Jews had been transported by plane to Israel while about 3,000 were waiting in camps. Some other Kurdish Jews crossed the border into Turkey on their way to Israel through Istanbul. Until recently the Iranian Government professed the wish to maintain the Jewish community in its present numbers, but has lately adopted a policy of permitting them to leave if they so desire. The Government, however, wanted the movement to be slow (except for the Jews of Kurdistan) and orderly, so that the liquidation of the Jewish assets would not greatly disturb the Iranian economy. By March 1951, about 9,000 to 10,000 Iranian Jews had emigrated to Israel and by April the number had risen to 12,000 to 13,000 (including 8,000 from Kurdistan.) At present it is estimated that since the establishment of the State of Israel nearly 20,000 Iranian Jews have settled there.

The recent political events in Persia are the cause for the increased desire of the Jews to leave the country.

LUNCHEON SERVICE

BY NORMAN COHEN

Gertie, what about my soup? Oh, what's the difference, she'll bring it when she wants to, I might as well save my breath. I don't know why you're looking so miserable. At least you've had your soup. Me, I've been waiting so long, I can't remember if I made motzi. Mind you, the food here's good, when it comes. If it comes! And froom! All the rebbes eat here. But the service . . . some say that it's staff shortage, but did you ever know anywhere else as bad? Some say Gertie is too jealous to have anyone else to help. I don't know, I'm sure . . . Gertie, what about my soup? No, I didn't ask for borsht. Gertie, half an hour I've been waiting. Oh, all right, leave the borsht.

She's brought you chop meat when you asked for beef? Of course she would. Only the regulars get beef, casuals always get chop meat. Don't ask her to take it back, you'll only upset her and then she probably won't serve anybody.

That fellow with the ginger moustache? Oh, she serves him quickly enough. Smart of you to notice that so soon. He's Shloimo Levy. Look, he's standing up to get his bill. See how quickly she runs to give it to him, even though it meant spilling a plate of soup all down the fellow two tables away. Still, he's only a casual.

Mind you, Shloimo was only like you or me once. It was "Gertie, what about my soup, please Gertie, I've got a business to go back to, Gertie I can't eat my meat with a dessert spoon," just like anyone else.

But one day, Shloimo came in in a great hurry. "Gertie," he says, "Gertie, please serve me quickly, I must catch a train at Victoria in an hour's time." Well, you know how it is with Gertie. She'd had a row with the cook that day and she wanted to take it out on the customers. So she plays him up. She serves all the other tables, but she avoids his. Then she brings the soup he didn't order. And the meat and vegetables she doesn't bring at all, only some lockshen pudding that had fallen down the serving hatch. Shloimo gets wild and shouts. Gertie starts crying and sobbing how her head is fit to burst what with the running in and out, she has only got one pair of hands, how come one poor girl is expected to serve all these rude men, she is fit to drop and all she gets is shouts and abuse. Oi, vai! In the end, somebody gives her some smelling salts and all right she will fetch him his meat, only he shouldn't yell at her. Well, the meat doesn't come so quickly and by the time Shloimo has eaten it, there is no hope of catching his train.

Well, you and I, we'd probably have cursed under our breath, but Shloimo is made of sterner stuff. After all, he's ginger. An idea comes to him how he will get his own back. So he takes a deep breath and then he bawls—

"Ashrei yoshvei vesecho!"

After all, it was Mincha time. And the place is full of froomer Yidden. So all the people near him have to leave off eating and stand up to say Ashrei. At the other end, they couldn't hear what was going on until Shloimo says the Kaddish at the top of his voice and they all get up to say the Amidah. A few apikorsim still sat down, but when it came to the Kedushah, well, who can sit down eating when all the others are saying the Kedushah?

Talk about disorganisation! All the lunches get cold and they keep yelling from the kitchen why aren't any orders being sent in? Then the cook gets wind of what's up. The poor fellow is in mourning and he can't resist the opportunity of another Kaddish. He comes in to join the others, forgetting about the oven, and soon a horrible smell of burning is all over the place.

Then somebody looks in through the window and sees all the people standing up and nobody eating their food. "Police, police!" he yells, "It's a hold up!" Then the whistles start blowing and before you know where you are an Inspector and six constables arrive for Olayna.

There was a lot of explaining to do and the proprietor wanted to charge Shloimo with disturbing the peace. Then all the rebbes started a row. What, a Yid is to be taken to court because he says Mincha? Even to Beth Din you couldn't take such a case!

And that is that. The police couldn't understand what was what, but if there is no charge there is no charge and they go away. The food is a bit cold, but just about eatable. The smell of smoke was terrible by then and they had to call for the fire brigade. But it was only a little fire.

Then we looked around for Shloimo, but he wasn't there. Some said he'd never come in again. They were wrong. The next day he was back. "Gertie," he said, "serve me quickly, I'm in a hurry." She looked at him and he looked at her and the air was like before a thunderstorm. We wondered who would crack first. It was Gertie. "Certainly, sir," she said. Gertie called somebody "sir" — it was enough to make you think the Messiah had come!

And it's been like that every day since. The minute he comes in, he gets served and the minute he stands up, he gets his bill.

I've often throught of trying the same stunt myself. So have the others. But you must be ginger to do a thing like that and you've got to have chutzpah . . . real yiddisher chutzpah . . .

CLASS IN COOKERY

APPLE PIE

two and one-quarter cups pastry flour three-quarters cup shortening
one teaspoon salt
juice of one orange

Sift flour, remove one-third cup and keep that separate, then add teaspoon of salt to larger amount of flour. Chop shortening with dough cutter to size of peas, and combine with flour mixture. To one-third cup flour, add juice of one orange, and make into paste, then add to flour and shortening mixture. Form into ball, divide in half, roll each part out to one-eighth of an inch in thickness, and line bottom of nine-inch pie tin with one part.

Filling

seven apples
one and one-third cups sugar
two tablespoons pastry flour
one teaspoon cinnamon
two teaspoons lemon juice

Peel and cut apples into wedges; add sugar, flour, cinnamon and lemon juice; mix together and pour on dough in pie tin. Moisten all around edge of dough with water, and cover with remaining half of dough. Puncture top, and flute all around edge with fork. Place in 450-degree oven for ten minutes, then reduce heat and bake for thirty minutes longer.

Mrs. B. Epstein,
830 Briar Hill Avenue, Toronto.

BUDGET HONEY CAKE

one cup granulated sugar
one cup dark honey, melted
two eggs
one-half cup salad oil
two cups all-purpose flour
two teaspoons baking powder
one-half teaspoon baking soda
one teaspoon cinnamon
one-half teaspoon nutmeg
one-half teaspoon cloves, or two teaspoons pastry spices
one-half teaspoon salt
one cup leftover cold tea
one-half cup broken walnut meats (optional)

Beat eggs and sugar until light. Add honey and oil, and stir well. Sift together dry ingredients, and add to creamed mixture alternately with the cold tea. This makes a rather thin batter. Pour into a greased and floured tube tin; or two low tins, and bake in a moderate oven for one hour. Leave cake in oven with heat turned off, for five minutes. Remove from oven, and cool off in inverted cake-pan, on a cake-rack. The total cost of this recipe, aside from walnut meats, is only about forty-five cents.

Mrs. George Fishman, 1423 St. Matthew Street, Montreal.

Drive Aims To Revitalize Sabbath

Conservative synagogues in the United States will undertake a large-scale, concerted drive for a revitalization of Sabbath observance beginning on Yom Kippur, October 10, it was announced by the United Synagogue of America, national organization of 412 Conservative synagogues. Using modern techniques of advertising and public relations, the drive will stress "The Sabbath — Key to Jewish Living, Key to Inner Strength" as the slogan to gain acceptance of Sabbath observance among Conservative Jews.

Joining in the campaign will be the Rabbinical Assembly of America, the National Women's League, the National Federation of Jewish Men's Clubs, the Young People's League, the United Synagogue Youth, the Cantor's Assembly, the Educator's Assembly and the National Association of the Synagogue Administrators.

The four-point program will call on 500,000 Conservative Jews for the preservation of home Sabbath ceremonies; for Sabbath home observance, in prayer and practice; for regular participation in public worship at the synagogue and for avoidance, as far as possible, of acts and activities that are averse to the Sabbath and its spirit.

For the beginning of the program all Conservative rabbis will be urged to make Sabbath observance the theme of their sermons on the Day of Atonement. The United Synagogue of America will also distribute "Sabbath — Its Meaning for Modern Man," a book by Abraham Joshua Heschel. Dr. Emil Lehman, assistant executive director of the United Synagogue, is in charge of the observance campaign.

Born in New York, the son of Haskell and Deborah Rosenbaum, he studied at the New York University College of Dentistry, where he became Clinical Professor of Oral Surgery. He also was director of dental service at Bellevue Hospital.

Paired with Arthur Lovibond, he won the national indoor doubles in 1916. The next year he shared this title with Frederick B. Baggs, he was five-time winner of the national veterans doubles, 1927, 1929, 1931, 1934 and 1938. In recent years he served as referee for the Southampton, L. I., tournament at the Meadow Club.

Dr. Rosenbaum was honored by his alma mater in 1932 when a meritorious service award was granted to him. He was past president of the college's alumni association, a member of the executive council of the New York State Dental Society for twelve years and chairman of the Oral Surgery Society of the New York area.

● CANADIAN Jewish Congress: Rev. Lazar Reich, who served as rabbi in his native Budapest, in camps for displaced persons in Germany, and more recently in Paris, is now established in Montreal where he and his family have found security for the first time in 12 years. During this interlude, Rev. Reich was in German slave copper mines, in Titoist partisan refugee camps, and under the shadow of the Hammer and Sickle. In the meantime, Mrs. Reich had sent off their son and daughter to the Red Cross which had planned to take them to the safety of Sweden. However, the Germans got the children and instead of permitting them to proceed to Sweden, shipped them unaccompanied into the ghetto of Budapest. News of the diversion of the transport of the children reached Mrs. Reich who was distraught until she found her daughter, Martha, in a hovel in the ghetto where she was taking care of some younger children. By another stroke of good fortune the son was found in another home, also in the ghetto.

duction the foundation of a sound economic structure. Mr. Tobin called attention to the similarity of "problems and tribulations confronting Israel today and those that confronted our own country" 150 years ago.

Israel not only is aware that the productivity in this country is the highest in the world "but is definitely planning her own agricultural and industrial program on a pattern very similar to our own," Mr. Tobin said.

"Her people and her Government know," he continued, "that the secret of our economic progress and prosperity in the United States lies in our highly productive machinery, operated by enlightened management in cooperation with a highly skilled and intelligent labor force organized into a free and independent trade union movement."

The new nation, Mr. Tobin said, is in need of tools and equipment, factories and housing facilities, adding "that this means Israel must have more investment capital and more capital goods to build up and expand her economy."

ZIONIST OFFICIAL

should not identify themselves with Israel's political parties.

Mr. Ben-Gurion was rebuked by many Zionist leaders when he suggested that the only place for a real Zionist was in Israel. American Zionists then accused him of trying to destroy the Zionist movement in the United States. He countered by noting that many American Jews — whether a majority or not is the subject of bitter debate — are not and never have been Zionists but are none the less sympathetic to Israel and support that country financially.

During the dispute, many Zionist leaders argued that the American Zionist movement is indispensable to Israel, to mobilize support in the United States for the new country and to take the lead in fund raising. These persons argue that when Israel requires American support it is the American Zionist who can be relied upon to give it, rather than unaffiliated Jewry.

Mr. Sonneborn, at the press conference, said that there has been a shrinkage in numbers and prestige of American Zionism during the last three years and that the Zionist Organization of America has been spending much of its time seeking projects to justify its existence, according to the New York Herald Tribune. Mr. Sonneborn is a vice-president of the Z. O. A.

One possibility that has been suggested is that all American Zionist groups should merge into a single organization. Various other solutions have been proposed. Mr. Sonneborn, after making clear that he had reached no final conclusions but was merely raising questions publicly, said:

"I don't believe that American Jews want to identify themselves with any (Zionist) political party. Between 95 and 98 per cent of American Jews, Zionist or not, identify themselves with Israel, however, by buying bonds, making contributions or investing privately in that country.

"I am not convinced, therefore, that the Zionist movement is any longer necessary. It may well be that the course of Zionism should reshape itself. For the last three years I have been concerned about just that problem. The Z. O. A. has been shedding membership — maybe it has outlived its usefulness. Perhaps the Z. O. A. can develop new areas of operation — maybe its work is a closed book."

Regardless of what else is done, Mr. Sonneborn said, the Z. O. A., as one of the largest Zionist groups, "should be the leader in the drive away from the party identification and should seek to eliminate partisan Zionism."

Mr. Sonneborn is national chairman of the United Palestine Appeal, one of the agencies for which the United Jewish Appeal raises funds. The U.P.A. allocates its funds to the Jewish National Fund, land purchasing agency in Israel, and the Palestine Foundation Fund, which finances immigration and settlement. He announced that the U.P.A. would call a national conference in Washington as soon as possible to reorganize the agency and end the mechanistic division of the funds it sends to Israel, and to streamline and consolidate Zionist funds. Since 1939 the U.P.A. has distributed more than $317,000,000 in Israel.

Benjamin G. Browdy, president of the Zionist Organization of America, issued a statement answering Rudolf G. Sonneborn's question of the status of political Zionism in the United States, who asked whether it should be scrapped or reorganized.

Mr. Browdy said the recent World Zionist Congress in Jerusalem, with the agreement of the Israel government, had decided that the World Zionist Organization should be accorded official status in relation to its work in Israel. With the issue thus settled, he added, "the revival of outworn controversies" will serve no useful purpose.

In appealing for an end to bickering for the sake of Israel and the Zionist movement, Mr. Browdy said: "The World Zionist Congress, with the agreement of the Israel government, unanimously decided that the World Zionist Organization be accorded official status governing its work in Israel. Thus, organized Zionism in this country and everywhere else has been duly recognized by the Israel government as a major instrument for carrying out the tasks of aiding the economic upbuilding of the state.

"The tasks which the World Zionist Congress has set for the Zionist Organization, which include aid to immigration, stimulation of agricultural and economic development, mobilization of funds and encouragement of private capital investment, require the maximum and united efforts of all Zionists for years to come."

munists, Mr. Wander became secretary-treasurer of the Cloak Joint Board, a position he held until 1930. In that year, he was named director of the new eastern out-of-town department, set up to organize and administer shops in the New Jersey, Connecticut, Long Island and Westchester areas, to which employers had moved to escape union jurisdiction, according to the New York Times.

At his death, Mr. Wander headed a department that dealt with 300 employers and 37,000 union members. Recently the department opened a health center of its own in Newark.

A member of the Grand Street Boys Association, Mr. Wander was a director of the Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society, chairman of the Labor Division of the Denver Ex-Patient Home, member of the Workmen's Circle and the Sasower Society and vice chairman of the Jewish Labor Committee. His survivors are his daughter, Mrs. Nina Wechsler, and two grandchildren, Robin and Andrew.

corrosive anti-Nazi cartoons, entitled "Murder, Inc.," was published in magazines and newspapers in New York. The series depicted Hitler, Goebbels, Goering & Co. as brutes intent on the destruction of civilization. Paradoxically, it was the refinement of his style, his concentration on detail and his meticulousness that made his cartoons the more effective because they made real and believable brutality that was almost beyond comprehension, says the Herald Tribune.

Mr. Szyk, who pronounced his name "Shick," was born in Lodz. He began painting at the age of four and when he was fifteen, his father, a manufacturer of textiles, sent him to art school in Paris.

A funeral service for Mr. Szyk was held at the Jewish Community Center, Queens Boulevard and 69th Street, Forest Hills, Queens. The service was conducted by Rabbi Ben Zion Bokser and Cantor Isaac Gorsky. Several hundred persons attended. Burial was at Pinelawn Cemetery, L. I., in the Jewish Community Center's plot.
